Ph.D. thesis on “Exploration of postcolonial, psychological and Environmental essence in Anuradha Roy’s Select Novels” critically examines how Anuradha Roy’s select novels represent postcolonial displacement, psychological trauma, and ecological consciousness within contemporary Indian contexts. It analyses the intersections between personal identity, memory, and belonging on the one hand, and environmental degradation and spatial transformation on the other. Through close reading of narrative technique, setting, and characterization, the study foregrounds how Roy’s fiction negotiates power, resistance, and healing across postcolonial, psychological, and environmental dimensions.
